The Porto-based band returns to the studio almost 20 years later

Urbanature announce the recording of "Flow"

Porto, Portugal - June 6, 2017 - Urbanature announce that they will enter the studio to begin recording "Flow," the second album by the Porto-based band.

Urbanature chose the producer and sound engineer Paulo Miranda and will record the new songs at AMPstudio, in Viana do Castelo, in the north of Portugal. The technical specifications of the studio and Paulo Miranda's experience were critical factors in the decision.

"The decision was very easy and straightforward. About 20 years ago, we recorded with Paulo Miranda the band's debut album, and we were very pleased with his vision of music. Moreover, technically, he is one of the best in our country," says Francisco Cardoso, the drummer of Urbanature.

"We aim to continue defining the music made in Portugal, but we will also promote the new album throughout the world. 'Flow' is full of powerful tunes, and each song is very independent of each other - it's in Urbanature's DNA," adds Nuno Camacho, the bass player of Urbanature.

In 1999, Paulo Miranda coordinated the recording of Urbanature's album "Evergr33n." Now, the producer from Viana do Castelo reveals that he received the call from the band with a mix of enthusiasm and curiosity.

"It's impossible to hide the surprise. Urbanature recorded with me in the late 1990s, and now they return with a completely renewed sound. I'm motivated, and I'm sure people will be amazed by the outcome," says Paulo Miranda, founder of AMPstudio.

The electronic indie band from Porto returns with songs that project the listener into the future.

"'Flow' will be a spatial, arid and introspective record. We want each song to be a very personal experience for each listener," notes Luís Madureira, keyboard player of Urbanature.

The final tracklist for "Flow" will be announced in the upcoming months, but Urbanature underline that the new album will feature around ten tracks, and only the tunes that make sense at this moment in time.

"We have other very strong melodies that will remain private for a later release. We realized that they fit into another context, and we decided to assign them to other flights," concludes João Marques, guitarist of Urbanature.

"Flow," Urbanature's full-length album, will be released between late 2017 and early 2018.

About Urbanature:

The Urbanature project began in January 1996, based on the idea of combining computers and musical instruments. The first demo, "Volume 1," caught the attention of the media, and Urbanature quickly began to captivate audiences and fans. After "100% Natural," the second demo, the band was invited to play in Portugal's big stages. Urbanature played Festival Paredes de Coura, Hard Club, Queima das Fitas de Porto e Coimbra, FNAC (Porto and Lisbon), Noites Ritual, and many other venues. In 1999, Urbanature released the debut album "Evergr33n" and became forever connected to the history of instrumental electronic music in Portugal.
